The hair transplantation procedure will be applied using the suitable method for the patient (such as DHI or FUE transplantation), depending on what is most appropriate for the patient. The duration of the transplantation will be determined by the number of grafts. During the procedure, a serum containing painkillers and antibiotics will be administered intravenously. Periodic checks will be conducted for blood pressure and overall condition. You will be able to taken to the patient rest area whenever you wish to rest.

After the hair transplantation procedure is completed, dressing will be applied to the donor area where the extraction was done. You will be informed about the process and instructed on the medications you should use. Then, your hair transplantation process will come to an end.
